JSW:

Attached is a copy of the employee request to participate in the D.C. Police Reserve Corps, which was approved in early August. As you see, training is done by the D.C. Police, and I presume that while on duty Reserve Corps members wear some sort of a uniform (but carry no weapons). Since the work is voluntary, I presume members are not paid. As I recall, you checked [REDACTED] on this matter, and he had no objections from the policy standpoint.

With regard to the employee request to be an "issuing justice of the peace," I have spoken to [REDACTED] and I get the impression from him that when he does serve, he exercises little discretion. Bonds and bails are set by the town council, and he collects the specified amounts. He may issue warrants, but they are returned to or tried by the municipal court. He is paid a specified amount (set by the town council) for each warrant, etc. he issues. As I mentioned to you, I have tried to contact the [REDACTED] to discuss this matter with him, but he has not returned my calls.
